PREFACE

There is growing recognition that education enhances the investments made in almost every other aspect of development effort. As "The State of the World's Children: 1989", brought out by the UNICEF puts it, whether it be a normal development of her child, or a couple deciding to postpone the next pregnancy, or a Community participating in a water supply and sanitation scheme. "Education catalyses the process by replacing resignation with a degree of confidence, acceptance with an awareness of choice".

And yet, for long, development theory tended to ignore human resource development. In keeping with the conventional Wisdom, in our State, education was not considered to be a development department and as such the education department was accustomed to an isolated pattern of working. The priority given to Education by the State Government together with the launching of the National Educational Policy, 1986 have occasioned a break with the past.

In the implementation of priority programmes like Universalisation of primary education, efficiency as well as equity can be aimed at only through micro-level planning and social mobilisation. In the industrial sector, project formulation has gone into vogue because of the need to secure funds from the Government (for Central public sector undertakings) or from the financial institutions. Except from externally aided projects, in the social sectors neither project formulation nor area planning has been earnestly attempted and implemented. For universalisation of elementary education as well as adult literacy, micro-level planning has to go beyond location of institutions and networking of formal, non-formal and adult literacy systems and should cover the content of education which is sought to be imparted. A standardised product is unlikely to cope with deficient demand: product differentiation is an absolute must eg., in tribal areas the content of education has necessarily to be related to the tribal identity rights and needs. Similarly enrollment of girls can be promoted only by strengthening child care facilities so that girls can leave their siblings there by attending school. An equal imperative is social mobilisation may be return to the halcyon days of Community Development.

Essential to any planning exercise is the timely availability of data. To this end, an attempt is now made to revive the publication of Educational Statistics.

I wish to compliment Sri T.Venka Reddy, Director, School Education, Sri. M.V.Venkata Reddy, Director, Adult Education, Sri C.Narsai Reddy, Director, SCERT and Sri B.Harisarvotham Rao and Sri Ch.Kamalakar Rao of SCERT for their efforts in bringing out the publication.

Suggestions to improve the quality of this publication are welcome and may be sent to Director, SCERT. As the data base have been computerised at SCERT, the suggestions can be readily incorporated in the next Edition.

INTRODUCTION

An attempt has been made in this Hand book of "A.P. Educational Statistics, 1988" to provide data on different sectors of Education in a single Publication to be useful to Educational Planners and Administrators and Research Workers. The data cover the period from 1977-78 to 1987-88. Time series data on selected items have been provided from 1956-57 onwards.

The data provided in this handbook have been categorised under the following areas.

- A. Demographic Characteristics -
- B. Literacy.
- C. Institutions
- D. Enrolment
- E. Teachers
- F. Expenditure on Education -
- G. Selected Indicators on Education
- H. Miscellaneous Items
- I. Graphs and Charts.

The data pertain to the departments of School Education, Adult Education, Higher Education, A.P. Residential Educational Institutions Society, Board of Secondary Education, Primary Schools Project with U.K. Assistance, Technical Education and Employment & Training.

The data on Demographic Characteristics and Literacy have been collected from the Directorate of Census operators, A.P., Hyderabad. The remaining data have been collected from the respective departments.
